The invention that is disclosed in document 1 is intended to prevent decreases in illumination intensity; therefore, it would have been easy for a person skilled in the art to conceive of configuring so that the spherical mirror (3''') is substantially disposed further towards the outside than the light beam that is formed when the light from the light source (1) is reflected off of the elliptical mirror (2'') in order to ensure that the spherical mirror (3''') does not block the light that is reflected by the elliptical mirror (2''). Likewise, document 2 also discloses the feature of "configuring the form of the opening in the first concave mirror (2a) so as not to block the beams of light that are reflected by the elliptical mirror (1) and irradiated upon the second focal point (2b) from among the beams of light that are emitted by the light source means (3)."

In addition, the lens means for converting the light that is emitted from the light source device into substantially parallel beams of light, which is set forth in claims 11 to 13, is well known.

The inventions set forth in claims 14 to 18 do not involve an inventive step in the light of documents 1 to 3 cited in the international search report, and newly cited document 4. Document 3 discloses an invention wherein the optical axes of the plurality of light source devices can be considered to coincide within the same flat plane, and document 4 discloses an invention wherein a reflector that is configured from two spheroid mirrors is positioned so that the positions of the two focal points more or less coincide. Therefore, it would have been easy for a person skilled in the art to conceive of using the light source device that is disclosed in document 1 in the invention that is disclosed in document 3 or document 4.

The invention that is set forth in claim 2 is not disclosed in any of documents 1 to 4, and would not have been obvious to a person skilled in the art.
